Case Study

The Challenge

The client is a large intermediary healthcare company responsible for coordinating health records and the provision of health services, including billing and electronic records for patients. They receive patient data from multiple sources and then process and transmit that data to others. As a custodian of other people's HIPAA-covered information, they needed to ensure that they're only doing business with partners and vendors who sufficiently protect their information.

The Solution

The client had about 80 vendors that needed to be validated for compliance with HIPAA laws. They urgently needed a way to easily collect data, without overwhelming their vendors with lengthy surveys or other complex questionnaires that were rarely even completed. Caliber Security Partners took the client's current 350 question survey and refined it to create a concise, 50 question assessment. Shortening the survey made it easier to collect the most critical information from the client's vendors. Caliber also created an interview process to audit the client's vendors and validate that the data collected on the assessment was accurately filled out.

The Results

Before Caliber's involvement, the client had process knowledge on only a handful of vendors. Caliber rebuilt the process in which the client collected compliance data from its vendors, which resulted in the client finally having all of their vendors information. The additional interview audit step Caliber provided was extra insurance that the vendors had the right systems and processes in place for HIPAA compliance.
